When a work injury or illness occurs...

1. If emergency medical care is needed, call 911 or go to the nearest emergency room.
2. Report injuries immediately to your supervisor or employer representative at (telephone). For non-emergency medical care go to the clinic or doctor’s office that is listed above in the workers' compensation section of your policy, or your employer may advise you on where to go for treatment. Your employer also is required to provide you with a claim form within one working day of learning of your injury. It is your responsibility to report every injury, no matter how slight, and request a claim form if it is more than a simple first aid injury.

Your employer must notify the claims administrator and authorize med-cal treatment within one working day of receiving your claim form. If your claim is denied, you may appeal the decision within 30 days of the denial by submitting a written request to the claim administrator. If your claim is not appealed within 30 days of the denial, you will lose your claim.

The Way It Was

In the early 20th century, women worked on the job to help their employers escape medical expenses and tax wages. Norms changed months and sometimes years. Junius decided that was too vast and too much. Anybody could be part. In most instances, the worker got nothing. It was costly, time consuming, and often unfair.

The Way It Is

Today, the California work compensation law provides a basic feature to these employers, as required by the law. Employers are required to either provide workers' compensation benefits. This helps to provide workers with the medical care and financial assistance they need. It also helps to ensure that employers are not held liable for injuries that occur to their employees. However, employers are required to purchase workers' compensation insurance, which can be costly. The California workers' compensation law is a complex and comprehensive system that provides coverage for a wide range of injuries and illnesses that are related to work. It is designed to protect both employees and employers by providing a fair and equitable balance between the two. The law requires that employers purchase workers' compensation insurance to provide coverage for medical expenses, lost wages, and legal fees associated with workplace injuries and illnesses. It is important to understand the benefits provided by this law and to ensure that you are covered under workers' compensation insurance. For more information, you can visit the California Labor Commissioner's website or contact your local county office. The website provides information on the benefits and requirements of the law, as well as contact information for local county offices. By understanding the benefits provided by the California workers' compensation law, employers and employees can ensure that they are protected and that any injuries or illnesses that occur on the job are handled in a fair and equitable manner.
